

Early stages of cultural development of the child

V.P. Zinchenko

Ph.D. in Psychology, Professor, Professor at the chair of general and experimental psychology department at the State university «Higher school of economy», Professor of the psychology department at the International University of nature, society and human «Dubna»
zinchrae@yandex.ru

Article is written on the basis of the report which has been read through (09.09.08) on International congress of the International society for cultural and activity research (ISCAR) which passed in San Diego (USA) from 8 till 13th September. The question on a role of a word at early stages of development of the child is discussed. Existence of natural (lower) mental functions, no less than before verbal stages of development of mentality, in particular thinking is put under doubt. On the basis of psychological, philosophical and theological sources the thesis that the word accompanies the person from the moment of a birth proves and becomes an integral part developing at the child of an image of the world and the actions.

Keywords: cultural-historical psychology, mental development of the child, early stages, a word, an image, an action.